Focus on 1 projet

Inaugurated in October 2015, the Police Commissariat of Timbuktu was rehabilitated and equipped thanks to a quick impact project.

More than a year after, Police regional Director, Mr. Brahim FOFANA, looks back at the effects of this intervention and what has changed since then.

What was the impact of jihadist occupation on Timbuktu Commissariat?

On the very first day of occupation, the commissariat has been sacked, windows and doors removed, archives destroyed and the equipment stolen. Property damage aside, police officers were forced to run away and one of them was made a prisoner.

At time of reconquest in April 2013, a first unit has been deployed, then replaced after one year by the team I supervise since the beginning of 2015.

What were the benefits of MINUSMA support with this QIP project?

MINUSMA intervention consisted in the rehabilitation of the premises, the fencing of the commissariat and the provision of IT equipment and furniture.

The fencing was crucial for securing staff and equipment. The armories has also been rehabilitated by UNMAS and racks were installed.

In Timbuktu, cases didn't come very often and the population were not comfortable in calling for police support.

The equipment provided clearly reinforced operational capacity and mobility of the personnel which reaches out more easily to communities. After the retrieval of the city, police didn't seek in first place to take actions, because it was a priority to reassure and build confidence with local residents that had been terrorized, through operations like patrols and outreach.

With the motorcycles provided by MINUSMA, we come and sit with the people, in sensitive areas and crossroads. We discuss also a lot with the visitors of the commissariat. All this work contributes to collecting crucial information, to risk prevention and confidence building.

In the beginning, the relationship between law enforcement institutions and the population was half-hearted. Some people expressed mistrust. Slowly, this feeling dissipated and today, the population comes freely to lodge complaints, deal with paperwork and provide information in view of prevention.

In front of the commissariat, Timbuktu's famous Al Farouk monument still bears the marks of occupation.

This contributes to cohesion in town". For another resident, streetlights installed near mosques "changes the life of those who sit and discuss waiting for the next call to prayer". A craftsman in the market place considers that "light brings more activity, more visitors who feel safe". To deal with the political, institutional and security crisis that deeply destabilized Mali since 2012, the Malian Government and the United Nations System in Mali resorted to the Peacebuilding Fund (PBF) in order to support peacebuilding and reconciliation.
